If you've ever dreamed of traveling through the Sahara, then Timbuktu is your ticket. Timbuktu is the second oldest continually inhabited city in the world and the majority of the city's buildings were built centuries ago. If you're going to spend any amount of time in Timbuktu, a visit to the National Musée de l'Homme is a must. The museum is a true reflection of the history and culture of the city. Visiting the museum is a small price to pay to avoid the chaotic streets of Timbuktu. As a kid, we never knew that the museum had such extensive and complete collections. Every child of the age of about six remembers the fascination of seeing their first animal. There's no doubt that Timbuktu's mascot is the giraffe. A visit to Timbuktu is a must if you're looking for the true African experience. By visiting Timbuktu, you're taking a trip back to an age when travel wasn't as commercial as it is today. All of the people I met in Timbuktu were people I'd never meet again. In many cases, this was because I couldn't find them again. If there was one experience that I enjoyed the most in Timbuktu, it was visiting the night market. There's something incredibly surreal about the colors of the night market. Most of the shops are closed, but the markets are open and vibrant. You can hear the music and smell the spices. The night market is a true representation of the life of the people in the town. I've seen an old man trade with an Arab for a lamp. Timbuktu is one of the most interesting cities I've ever visited. Although Timbuktu is small, there are two things that really make the city unique. The first is the size of the city's population. At the time of my visit, the population of Timbuktu was 82157476af
